Birthday

Cultural institutions cast in idealism and run on a shoe-string are not the fittest members of our civilization, unfortunately. Their mortality is high, and highest in the first few years, like human infants in the days of diphtheria. Birthdays, consequently, are occasions of a certain naive, symbolic wonder to children and to institutions such as KPFA. They are occasions not for self-congratulation, but for the celebration of survival, and for self-strengthening against the bacteria to come.

In seven years, come April 15, the record of accomplishment has not been so bad. Faults, breaches, and dullnesses are concomitants of any existence; we have had our share, like other sturdy infants — little magazines, little orchestra societies, educational radio and TV stations elsewhere. We wish them all well, and sympathize only too acutely with their problems. KPFA set out to keep freedom of expression at a difficult time. We aimed to provide a platform for those hardy or reckless enough to climb up. We wanted to provide adult entertainment that would give enrichment rather than escape. Our goal has been to deepen the cultural community, and we can only measure our success in the steadily growing response and encouragement we receive monthly from persons who support our essential point of view.

For like infants, cultural institutions like KPFA need affection — not later on, perhaps, but certainly in the first seven years. We find ourselves often appealing for money; but vital also for our entire existence is a sense of kinship with the listening audience. Our position today, however precarious, is firmer than ever in the past as far as financial and spiritual support is concerned. The struggle for life and a good life is difficult, and perhaps sometimes tiresome, but it grows safer and more confident as birthdays pass.

A seven-year anniversary is neither one of diamond, gold, nor silver. A silver lining is there, however. No longer dogged by experimentalism, KPFA can now look forward to the time when we shall no longer be pressed with insecurities. To our fourteenth birthday!

CELEBRATION

KPFA's birthday on April 15 will be noted by several programs in the course of that evening. The recorded concert at 5:45 will present composers and performers who have been closely associated with the station. The composers are Darius Milhaud, represented by his Quartet #12, and Roger Sessions, whose Second Piano Sonata will be heard in a performance by Bernhard Abramowitsch. The concert will conclude with a performance by the Griller Quartet who, like Mr. Abramowitsch, have given many "live" concerts in KPFA's studios.

Anthony Boucher will begin his "Golden Voices" program at 7:30 with some comments on the occasion. Mr. Boucher's program was first heard on KPFA's first day on the air, seven years ago. At 8:00, a documentary produced by KPFA's staff will illuminate the station's history.

PROGRAMS TO NOTE

DRAMA — Sean O'Casey's Juno and the Paycock will be broadcast Saturday, April 21, at 9:00, in a performance recorded in Dublin. Before the play begins, there will be an introduction by the author.

LIVE CONCERTS for this Folio period begin with a recital by Judy Maas, mezzo-soprano, and Helen Sizer, pianist, on Monday, April 16, at 8:15. On Wednesday, April 18, the pianist Naomi Sparrow, who is a veteran KPFA performer, will play a program of music by composers living in the Bay Area. Included are works by Seymour Shifrin, Leon Kirchner, and Jack Swackhamer. The time is 8:20.

The Little Symphony will be heard in a concert broadcast directly from the Berkeley Little Theatre on Friday, April 20, at 8:30. Gregory Millar will conduct the orchestra in a program of eighteenth century and twentieth century music.

Music of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries will be performed in our studio by Mills College singers and players conducted by George Houle, on Monday, April 23 at 8:15. On Wednesday, April 25, at 8:15, we broadcast a recital by Leone Cotrell, soprano and Don Jones, pianist. The final studio concert for this period will be given by Francesco Mazzi, violinist, and Donald Pippin, pianist, who will play sonatas by Brahms and Pizzetti.

LIVE DISCUSSIONS, broadcast from the studios Tuesday nights, treat of the results of peaceful competition between capitalism and communism on April 17, and the anatomy of prejudice on April 24. The time for both is 8:05.
